

Abstract

A device for impact sensing having at least two pressure sensors is described, where pressure values are communicated
5 from the pressure sensors to a processor, and the processor performs impact sensing on the basis of the pressure value. The processor communicates the pressure values to additional vehicle systems, which use them to fulfill their own functions, or at least to carry out a plausibility check of 10 their own pressure values.

(Figure 1)